Dear Friars and Friends,

Peace and All Good. I hope that this note finds you well. This is the cover letter for the second set of resources to help you in ministering to and with your communities. I hope that the first set of resources were helpful.

Since the last set of resources, the context of our ministry has continued to change. On October 7, 2001, the United States and its allies began the bombing of targets in Afghanistan. In many ways, this offered many people in the U.S. a sense of emotional relief. Though the case can be made for this and, potentially, other military action, it will never fully "solve" the problems that lead to the terrible attacks on September 11th. As this bombing continues it will be imperative that we help our people understand what are the desirable outcomes regarding this and other action. We must be clear that violence will most often breed more violence. In the midst of the military response, we continue the long process of sifting through the wreckage of the World Trade Center, and more importantly, support our people in their healing. We will continue the process of grief and comfort discussed in the reflection from Walter Brueggemann. Hopefully, we can continue offering healing liturgies and other reflection processes.

We also need to continue the preparation and implementation of other ways of helping our people to continue and/or begin the process of social analysis and faith reflection. The offerings in this packet of resources are designed to work in the bridging of these moments of pastoral leadership. Of course, each minister must determine the pastoral needs and location of their ministry. These resources are offered in that spirit. I hope that they can be helpful.

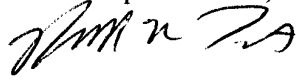

The first set of materials in this mailing is two statements that can help people put the events of September 11th and the U.S. response into some sort of faith context. They might be used as bulletin/newsletter inserts or as handouts located at ministerial entrances. The second set of materials is a list of some locations to find further sources for prayer, reflection, and understanding. There is a lot of information appearing out there. This is some of the best that we have found. If you have other sources, please let me know and we can forward them to everyone.

We are still working to place all past, current and future materials on the HNP website. We will let you know when this has been achieved.

Again, I hope that these are helpful to you and your ministries. If there is anything that I can do to assist you, please do not hesitate to let me know.

There will be additional resources coming in the next weeks. Until then, may our world may and we move closer to justice and peace.

In the Hope of Peace,

STATEMENTS IN RESPONSE TO SEPTEMBER 11, 2001 AND US ATTACKS ON AFGHANISTAN

The following statements are worthy of your consideration as ministers. You may also wish to provide them to the folks in your ministry, as bulletin inserts or handouts. They offer us a way to insure that we are able to offer a realistic but prophetically oriented voice of reason. In essence, they both say that a military response may be necessary from a moral point of view. However, it is never a sufficient end on its own. We must always look beyond violence to find ways of building a stronger, more just society. This will be how peace can be achieved.

Deny Them Their Victory

A Religious Response to Terrorism (September 24, 2001)

We, American religious leaders, share the broken hearts of our fellow citizens. The worst terrorist attack in history that assaulted New York City, Washington, D.C., and Pennsylvania has been felt in every American community. Each life lost was of unique and sacred value in the eyes of God, and the connections Americans feel to those lives run very deep. In the face of such a cruel catastrophe, it is a time to look to God and to each other for the strength we need and the response we will make. We must dig deep to the roots of our faith for sustenance, solace, and wisdom.

First, we must find a word of consolation for the untold pain and suffering of our people. Our congregations will offer their practical and pastoral resources to bind up the wounds of the nation. We can become safe places to weep and secure places to begin rebuilding our shattered lives and communities. Our houses of worship should become public arenas for common prayer, community discussion, eventual healing, and forgiveness.

Second, we offer a word of sober restraint as our nation discerns what its response will be. We share the deep anger toward those who so callously and massively destroy innocent lives, no matter what the grievances or injustices invoked. In the name of God, we too demand that those responsible for these utterly evil acts be found and brought to justice. Those culpable must not escape accountability. But we must not, out of anger and vengeance, indiscriminately retaliate in ways that bring on even more loss of innocent life. We pray that President Bush and members of Congress will seek the wisdom of God as they decide upon the appropriate response.

Third, we face deep and profound questions of what this attack on America will do to us as a nation. The terrorists have offered us a stark view of the world they would create, where the remedy to every human grievance and injustice is a resort to the random and cowardly violence of revenge - even against the most innocent. Having taken thousands of our lives, attacked our national symbols, forced our political leaders to flee their chambers of governance, disrupted our work and families, and struck fear into the hearts of our children, the terrorists must feel victorious.

But we can deny them their victory by refusing to submit to a world created in their image. Terrorism inflicts not only death and destruction but also emotional oppression to further its aims. We must not allow this terror to drive us away from being the people God has called us to be. We assert the vision of community, tolerance, compassion, justice, and the sacredness of human life, which lies at the heart of all our religious traditions. America must be a safe place for all our citizens in all their diversity. It is especially important that our citizens who share national origins, ethnicity, or religion with whoever attacked us are, themselves, protected among us.

Our American illusion of invulnerability has been shattered. From now on, we will look at the world in a different way, and this attack on our life as a nation will become a test of our national character. Let us make the right choices in this crisis - to pray, act, and unite against the bitter fruits of division, hatred, and violence. Let us rededicate ourselves to global peace, human dignity, and the eradication of injustice that breeds rage and vengeance.

As we gather in our houses of worship, let us begin a process of seeking the healing and grace of God.

Catholic Bishops' Conference President Issues Statement on Military Action

WASHINGTON (October 9, 2001) -- Following is the statement of Galveston-Houston Bishop Joseph A. Fiorenza, President of the U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops, regarding the military action by the United States:

"As our nation undertakes military action, our Bishops' Conference calls for continued prayer, resolve and restraint in response to the terrorist attacks of September 11. We ask for prayers for our President and national leaders, for our servicemen and women, and for all those touched by those terrorist attacks.

"We renew our call that our military response must be guided by the traditional moral limits on the use of force. Military action is always regrettable, but it may be necessary to protect the innocent or to defend the common good. We support efforts to make clear that this response is directed at those who use terror as well as those who assist them, not at the Afghan people or Islam. Measures to insure the safety of innocent civilians are both necessary and important. We strongly support humanitarian initiatives which respond to the plight of the Afghan people, especially refugees and displaced civilians.

"We are encouraged by the efforts to build a global coalition to seek justice and a comprehensive response using diplomatic, economic and humanitarian as well as legitimate military means. Beyond the crisis of the moment, we continue to urge the renewal of diplomatic and other measures to secure a just peace for Palestinians and Israelis, and a world which is more just and more peaceful for all who suffer the loss of their God-given rights. Our every effort should be guided by our desire for a world which truly respects the rights and dignity of every human person.

"In the midst of conflict, we pray for peace. In the aftermath of terrorism, we seek justice. In response to hate, we offer love. At a time of trial, we turn to God as our refuge and strength to show us the path to healing, reconciliation and peace."

Center of Concern

The Center of Concern, based in Washington, DC, offers a number of resources on their website, including a selection of responses to the events of September 11th, a prayer service, images from around the world, etc. www.coc.org

National Federation for Catholic Youth Ministry

The National Federation for Catholic Youth Ministry, a national professional association for Catholic youth ministers, provide on their website a number of resources for prayer, reflection, and action in the wake of the events of September 11th. The references and links provided will be especially helpful for those who work with youth, but will also be of interest to all involved in church ministry. www.nfcym.org

National Catholic Education Association

The National Catholic Education Association provides on its website a Family Prayer service and information on Catholic Schools September 18, 2001 Solidarity Day. They also include links to other resources that may help in preparing a response to the attacks of September 11. www.ncea.org

GIA Publishers

GIA music has prepared a prayer service, reflection, and music resources for use with children and has granted permission for churches and schools to use these without charge. The prayer service and reflection could also be used with adults. www.giamusic.com

St. Mary's Press

Prayer services and lesson plans for those who work with teens, including teachers, youth ministers, and parents are available without charge at the St. Mary's Press website. I suspect any number of these could be adapted for use with adults.
